INDUSTRIAL CHIC - WHAT IS IT?

The Industrial Chic style is most simply created by using raw, urban-look materials mixed with the juxtaposition of contemporary simplicity. Warm earthy tones are used to create relaxing atmospheres enhanced with natural materials that celebrate their raw, unfinished or aged beauty.

It sometimes is described as a touch of modern farmhouse style but edgier. Industrial chic can either be using reclaimed or recycled product or simply using more industrial look materials, typically exposed brick, concrete floors, timber beams and copper piping.

The trend in Australia is seen to have stemmed from inner city restaurants and shop-fronts where factories have been converted into modern industrial chic design, often exposing existing brick structures and enhancing a peeling paint look or sometimes re-creating that look with recycled bricks. So popular is the look that it has also started to move into people's homes. It particularly has appeal for families wanting to add a rustic appearance and touch of authenticity to their new homes.

The recycled look of the Manhattan brick complements both contemporary and traditional home designs.

INDUSTRIAL CHIC BRICKS

GET THE LOOK WITH PGH BRICKS

The Industrial Chic movement has fuelled the inspiration behind the creation of our bespoke, locally made Manhattan Collection of bricks. The urban and raw Manhattan Collection is signified by bricks highlighting the weathered and distressed imperfections of intended knots, scratches and nicks designed to bring to life an edgy, exposed brick wall look and feel. The Manhattan Collection from PGH Bricks can help you achieve a warehouse style home look and feel from a new build beginning.

The Manhattan Collection has been designed to help achieve a rustic and recycled look in a modern build with all the benefits of a new brick.

The muted tones of the Chelsea brick bring a harmonious, comfortable elegance to interiors and exteriors alike.

MANHATTAN TRIBECA

The rich Tribeca colour palette brings personality into any space. It balances well with exterior greenery and adds warmth to interiors.

INDUSTRIAL CHIC - HOW TO ACHIEVE IT.

The Manhattan Collection has been designed to help you achieve a warehouse-style home look and feel to your new build or renovation.

For those designing and building a new home and wanting to create this look, there are three elements to consider – materials, scale and layers. Exposed brick feature walls are a good starting point.

Architect Andrew Benn of Benn + Penna Architecture, has created the look for a number of his clients and says that the challenge is to mix materials commonly associated with industry, such as bricks, concrete and steel, with softer finishes, to make it “still feel comfortable and domestic”.

Benn says that some of the methods he uses to add an industrial feeling include adding larger elements to a build, such as exposing a beam, adding a brick feature wall, or removing floors to create a double height space.

The benefits of Manhattan bricks

- Provides the look of a traditional recycled brick with all the benefits of a new brick
- Durable, can be used by the sea (Exposure Grade)
- Each batch has its own unique look creating an individual appearance
- Produced in Australia with short lead times

Exposed brick walls, copper piping and concrete floors are some of the key elements of this style. Indeed, a lot of its appeal is that it lets these raw materials shine through.
